Topic: Some children do not have the ability for learning languages. Therefore schools should not make children do that. Do you agree or disagree?

OUTLINE:

Reasons why children should learn a foreign language:

When students study a foreign language, their creativity and analytical skills will improve.

Foreign language study creates more positive attitudes and less prejudice toward people who are different.

Dealing with another culture enables students to gain a more profound understanding of their own culture.

Knowing multiple languages may increase students' employability when they grow up and enter the work force.

How foreign languages should be taught in schools:

Children should be able to choose which foreign language they really want to learn.

Lessons in foreign languages should be presented in various ways in order to cater for students' different learning styles. (e.g. activities, projects, presentations, roleplays, etc.)

Children with learning difficulties should receive special attention from teachers.

Foreign languages are one of the necessary elements to integrate into the world. However, in my considered opinion, schools should not force their students who do not have the ability to study new languages.

In the first place, if students have to study things they do not like, it will result in them not liking it still. Children who learn under pressure will not do well in the examination. Their results are probably affected as a consequence. It leads students to lose their passion, aspiration not to mention motivation in studying. Another reason is that students would have more chance to focus on primary subjects. Many children who do not have new-language-ability may have some special aptitudes such as high numeracy in math, physics and biology or literacy in literature and so on. Therefore, they should spend more time on studying their favorite subject in school or developing their creativity.

Some opponents reckon that if schools force them to study new language, they can still learn it. There is much evidence which shows the results of changing the way to teach language by creating special education classes or using more pictures and interactive activities. Despite the fact that the point of view may be true, the cost of opening these special education classes is much higher than normal ones. Therefore, in order to do that, schools need to obtain sufficient funds. It seems to be impossible while the global economy is suffering from the effects of recession.

In summary, although both suggestions are provided with the aim of supporting children's development, no-force could be better than the other in this situation. It is not necessary to force children to do what they are not good at.

Topic: Some people think that we do not need to print papers newspapers anymore. Do you agree or disagree?

Band 6.0

There are different perspectives about printing papers, newspapers. However, the printing ways to provide the news cannot cope with the fast changing society and the development of technologies makes it easier for people to acquire information. Therefore, I completely agree that there will be no need for printing newspapers.

Newspapers would not need to be printed, because people are surrounded by information and easily shared within their societal group. They can easily update and share information with each other and can enhance their relationships. For example, people are associated with at least one societal group such as a school or a work. From there, people can easily share the latest news each other and can develop the communication.

By the time, newspapers being printed and published, the news become outdated and the information may irrelevant. Since we are living in a fast-moving society and the newspapers and news should be changed at rapidity. In the case of US election, for instance, all the other technologies have kept updating with the process of elections whereas the newspapers only published with the final result. Therefore, publishing papers cannot follow with the speed of society changes.

Printed papers, newspapers would disappear because people use alternative forms to acquire information. It is a fact that, a majority of the people already acquire information through TV, internet or mobile phones for its convenience. Lets' take an example for my house, my grandmother acquired news from TV, my parents received the news from internet and I heard about the latest news through mobile phones. Therefore, people have changed the ways to acquire information overtime.

In conclusion, the weakness of printed newspapers cannot overtake the strengths of modern technologies and societal group. Therefore, the demand for printing would be reduced.

Band 7.0

Many people argue that traditional printed newspaper is no longer suitable in the new era. Therefore, this kind of presenting information should be abandoned completely. In my opinion, I strongly agree with this statement in views of following reasons.

One possible reason is that taking conventional printed newspaper has taken a heavy toll on environment. There is no point in denying that newspaper is made chiefly from wood, which harvest from natural forests. Consequently, the more wood used in press industry, the more natural resources we human being exploit excessively. Although traditional newspaper is considered as a renewable source, we could not deny that the large number of users, who take newspapers daily, caught littering the street uncontrollably instead of separating it for recycling. As a result, this could lead to the damage of surrounding public senery and environmental pollution, which is the globally serious proplems nowadays.

Furthermore, apart from the traditional printed newspapers, readers have had the tendency to turn into other alternatives, which are much more appealing and highly convenient. It is true that that with the proliferation of Internet, it is by far easier for readers to find the highly informative websites, which interest them with the latest news and greater diversity about all aspects of life including health, environment, politics, and so forth. Moreover, there are various high-tech tools such as smart-phone, tablets, laptop which enable readers to enjoy news wherever they are, even in the geographically isolated areas, where news stands are relatively rare.

In conclusion, it seems to me that conventional printed newspaper would die out in the not too distant future due to the fact that it not only negatively affect environment, but also it is a virtually obsolete way of accessing information.

Advertisements are becoming more and more common in everyday life. Is it a positive or negative development?

Outline:

Advantages of advertising:

Advertising plays a significant role in the introduction of a new product => helps manufacturers expand their market.

Advertisements help educate the consumers by familiarizing them with the new products and their diverse uses => buyers are better-informed about available products.

Advertising provides and creates more employment opportunities for many talented people. (e.g. painters, photographers, singers, cartoonists, musicians, models and people working in different advertising agencies.)

Disadvantages of advertising:

It is said that advertising costs are passed on to the consumers in the form of high prices. (Manufacturers spend large amount on advertising => it creases the cost of the products => price of products is raised.)

Advertisements may confuse rather than help buyers. (The actual product was quite different from the information given in the advertisement.)

Advertisements can cause decay of social values. (Many times, foul language and objectionable pictures are used in advertising in order to attract a particular class. They may be insulting to a particular class.)

Bài mẫu band 7.0

It is true that the number of advertisements have been increasing dramatically in recent years. Besides producing the strongly positive effects, this worldwide phenomenon also brings about various negative ones that merit considerations.

On the one hand, the sharply exponential rise of adverts could benefit both enterprises and national governments in social and economical aspect, regardless the types of advertisement. Admittedly, in the new era, the more adverts companies publish, the more customers and viewers they could lure. For example, Nike, a largely reputable shoes company, has applied successfully celebrity endorsement to promote their image to customers and has become one of the most influential enterprises in the world. Therefore, thanks to these adverts, the companies itself whose products are advertised would maximise their profits and develop strongly. Besides, if enterprises earn large income, then they could pay more tax revenue to government. As a consequence, national governments could invest heavily in key areas such as education or heath services, especially for the underdeveloped countries where illiteracy and poor sanitation remain the serious problems in society.

On the other hand, this trend also gives rise to many significant drawbacks for both the customers and government officials. There is no point in denying that the more adverts show on mass media, the more difficult choices customers themselves have to face. Consequently, they have to encounter with great difficulty in giving the final purchasing decision to deliberately choose the suitable products, which satisfy them in both quality and general appearance, out of a range of products advertised in official media. Furthermore, it is true that governments themselves must enact strict regulations in order to control the large amount of adverts, otherwise the misleading advertisements could display unmanageably in national media.

In conclusion, although advertising industry has been thriving strongly and result in many positive outcomes, we could not underestimate the negative impacts on purchasers and state governments of this trend.
